I. Supplemental statement of facts

The Respondent's motion to dismiss is based upon what it argues was an unreasonable period of three months between the denial of the first habeas corpus petition filed in case number HC18701 by the California Superior Court, and the filing of the second habeas corpus petition in case number D044761 in the California Court of Appeal. A review of the time line and the intervening decision of the United States Supreme Court in Cunningham v. California, 549 U.S. 270 (2007), will demonstrate that the overall time the Petitioner took to present his state habeas petitions, and the period between the denial of the petition in case number HC18701 and the filing of the petition in case number D044761, was reasonable. The time from the filing of the first state habeas corpus petition, on November 9, 2006, and the denial of the Petition for Review in case number S155949, on November 14, 2007, should therefore be used to toll the one year statute of limitations under 28 U.S.C.

2 The Respondent correctly notes that the Petitioner's state appeal became final ninety 3 days after the denial of the Petition for Review in case number S135191. That was on 4 November 22, 2005. The Petitioner filed the state habeas corpus petition in case number
5 HC18701 in the Superior Court of San Diego County on November 9, 2006, thirteen days
6 before the one year statute of limitations would have expired on November 22, 2006. That 7 petition raised two grounds based upon issues outside the record of the direct appeal
8 concerning a claim of ineffective assistance of trial counsel. These were not found to be 9 untimely by the Superior Court and were denied on merits on January 4, 2007.

10 Eighteen days later, the United States Supreme Court decided Cunningham v.
11 California, 549 U.S. 270 (2007), upon which the Petitioner's third claim is based. Although 12 the Respondent is correct that the substance of this claim had been raised in the Petitioner's
13 direct appeal in case number D044761, citing Blakely v. Washington, 542 U.S. 296 (2004), 14 he obviously could not on direct appeal have cited Cunningham, a case that directly related 15 to the California sentencing scheme, because that case had not yet been decided. The third
16 claim raised before the California Court of Appeal in the habeas corpus petition in case
17 number D050608 was therefore the same sentencing argument concerning the improper 18 imposition upper term sentences that had been made on direct appeal, but the habeas corpus
19 petition cited a subsequently decided United States Supreme Court case that directly 20 addressed California's sentencing scheme and held that the imposition of an upper term 21 sentence based upon factors not found by the trier of fact violates the federal constitution.
22 The Petitioner filed that claim in the California Court of Appeal on April 4, 2007, seventy-23 two days after Cunningham had been decided.

24 The three claims raised in case number D050608 were not found to be untimely by 25 the California Court of Appeal, and were denied in the merits on August 22, 2007. The 26 Petitioner then filed a timely Petition for Review from that denial within ten days in case
27 number S155949, instead of the alternative of filing another original petition in the California
28 Supreme Court. That petition was denied on November 14, 2007. The petition in this case

1 was filed seven days later.

2 II. The ninety days between the filing of the petitions in case number HC18701 and case
3 number D050608 was reasonable

4 The Respondent's motion to dismiss is premised upon a claim that the gap of ninety 5 days between the denial of the petition in case number H18701 and the filing of the petition
6 in case number D050608 was "unreasonable" under Evans v. Chavis, 546 U.S. 189 (2006),
7 which found a delay of six months to be "presumptively unreasonable." The Respondent
8 omits all the facts of that case, in which the overall time Chavis requested be tolled was three 9 years one month, not six months. Id., 546 U.S. at 201. The six months period was when that 10 Petitioner had unimpeded access to a prison law library, and the Court found that assuming 11 every other reason for delay of over three years was found to be reasonable, the unexplained 12 delay of six months was presumptively unreasonable given that most states allow thirty to 13 sixty days between the denial of a state post-conviction petition and filing an appeal or other 14 state petition in a higher court.

15 There are at least two differences between the "presumptively unreasonable" scenario
16 in Evans v. Chavis and this case. First, the total period of time the Petitioner in this case 17 spent the California Courts on habeas corpus was slightly more than one year, from the 18 initial filing of the petition in case number HC18701, to the denial of the Petition for Review 19 in case number S155949. Of that time, almost nine months were spent while the various 20 petitions were pending in the state courts, from November 9, 2006, to January 4, 2007, in 21 case number HC18701; from April 4, 2007 to August 22, 2007, in case number D050608;
22 and from August 31, 2007, to November 14, 2007, in case number S155949. This is a far 23 cry from the three years one month gap the Petitioner in Evans v. Chavis argued tolled the 24 statute. Even assuming the Petitioner exceed the "reasonable" time of sixty days implicitly 25 argued by the Respondent, he expedited the review of the state process after the denial of the 26 petition in case number D050608 by filing a Petition for Review in the California Supreme 27 Court within ten days under California Rule of Court 8.500(e)(1), and not another original 28 habeas corpus petition in the California Supreme Court within the "reasonable" period of 1 sixty days.

2 The second difference between this case and Evans v. Chavis is that between the 3 denial of the habeas corpus petition in case number HC18701, and the filing of the petition
4 in case number D050608, the United States Supreme Court decided Cunningham v.
5 California, 549 U.S. 270 (2007). Although the Respondent argues this does not justify a 6 delay because it relates to an issue that had already been raised and rejected on direct appeal 7 in case number D044761, it was imminently reasonable for the Petitioner to cite to the 8 California Courts an intervening decision of the United States Supreme Court that directly 9 supported his claim as it applied to California law. It was also reasonable for the Petitioner
10 to wait for at least sixty days after the filing of Cunningham to determine if any favorable 11 California state decision, in the wake of Cunningham, would provide a basis for relief under 12 California law. For example, it is highly likely that if this case proceeds past the motion to 13 dismiss to a briefing on the merits, the Respondent will argue that Cunningham is not 14 retroactive under Teague v. Lane, 489 U.S. 288 (1989). If, however, California Courts had 15 decided to make Cunningham, a federal decision, retroactive under state law (a procedure
16 that was recently approved in Danforth v. Minnesota, ___ U.S. ___, 128 S.Ct. 1028 (2008)
17 even if the United States Supreme Court held the intervening decision was not retroactive 18 under federal law), it would have given the Petitioner a basis for relief without requiring that 19 issue be raised and litigated before the federal court. Under these circumstances, where there 20 was an intervening decision by the United States Supreme Court concerning California
21 sentencing that directly related to a claim that was raised in the habeas corpus petition in case 22 number D050608, it was imminently reasonable for the Petitioner to wait to determine if, in 23 the wake of Cunningham, he could obtain relief under state law prior to coming to federal.

24 The ninety days between the denial of the petition in case number HC18701, and the 25 filing of the petition in case number D050608 also conforms with the deadline set for filing
26 a Petition for Writ of Certiorari in the United States Supreme Court pursuant to Supreme 27 Court Rule 13.1. It was imminently reasonable for the Petitioner, given the intervening 28 decision of Cunningham, to use the ninety days set as a filing deadline set by the United

1 States Supreme Court as a reasonable time in which to file the petition in case number
2 D050608.

3 When the time from November 9, 2006, to November 14, 2007 is tolled, the Petitioner
4 had thirteen days, to November 27, 2007, to file the petition in this case. He filed his six 5 days early, on November 21, 2007.

7 III. CONCLUSION

8 For the reasons set forth in this opposition, the Petitioner asks that the Respondent's 9 motion to dismiss his habeas corpus petition be denied.
